I am from Texas ,and have been modeling for two years now ,which I never dreamed I would be doing . I was discovered while working at a local hair Salon as a receptionist . I was published after my second shoot with a local photographer ,and found I absolutely love being photographed. My fees depend on the shoot location , time ,and wardrobe.

You know those little girls who idolize models and dream to be one one day? I wasn't one of those- I was more of a tomboy. It wasn't until I had met a photographer who really liked my "style". I had no idea what he was talking about. But over time i just kept meeting people and modeling became super fun and I discovered my "style"! I'm happy to say that I have gotten to work with the photographers I've worked with. I plan to continue to climb and just let the wind take me where I need to go.

Christina Adkins

Born and Raised in North Florida, you can find Christina Adkins rocking a messy bun and yoga pants more often than bikinis and stilettos, spending time with her 2 year old special needs son and supportive husband of 5 years. This 24 year old petite bombshell currently lives in Hawthorne, FL, but sees a move to a bigger city in her future. "I think that all things come in due time. I would definitely consider myself a big city girl living in a small country town", she begins. "Although I love my community, I also very much appreciate the culture and diversity a larger city has to offer. I'm looking forward to what the next chapter of my life has to offer, wherever that may be." And she should be, considering what chapters she's already overcome.

Growing up bullied and obese with a chronically depressed mother and a rarely present alcoholic father, Christina eventually turned to parties, drugs and a string of abusive and unhealthy relationships to mask her pain. After hitting rock bottom at the young age of eighteen, she finally started the long journey to recovery.

After meeting her husband in 2010, he encouraged her to pursue modeling, which became a huge creative outlet and something Christina finds very therapeutic. "It's like I become a different person when I shoot.", she says. "The camera allows me to open up and be myself believe it or not. And the confidence it builds is really just wonderful. I've learned to love my flaws because they're what makes me look different from the next model. I'm not so sure I would have become so comfortable with them if it wasn't for the modeling." Among other things, her height was one of those things she considered a flaw when she first entered modeling. 5'2" is below the height of most of the women in high-fashion work, the genre that most captures her interest. "Although I've started to see some of the beauty standards shattered in this industry", she began passionately. "It's unrealistic to think everything that looks good on a tall person will work for a petite person, and I think that we need to see more "short/petite" women represented, even on the runway."

In 2013, Christina and her husband welcomed their son Zaiden into the world who suffers from hearing loss and the developmental delays that accompany it, as well as Symbrychydactly (he only has a pinky and a thumb on his left hand). But when asked about her son, there is no sadness in her response, only the deep love that turns and parent into full on gushing mommy. "I am someone who has had a hard time adjusting to changes in the past. But with Zaiden's special needs, he's taught me a lot about throwing expectations out the window and just taking things as they come. He's like my permanent little teacher. As a parent, I have to teach him a lot. But as a child, he's also teaching me a lot. As far as Christina's goals for the future? "Well, of course my family comes first. But I'm also very interested in more traveling work (she traveled to San Francisco for the first time last month on a shoot), and getting more of my work published. I'll shoot as long as I get bookings, and I'm looking forward to what adventure comes my way next!"

She actually started modeling about ten years ago through good old Myspace. That is when she was first approached by photographers to do photo shoots when social media modeling was just starting. At first she was too scared and thought it was a scam. Then she saw girls she knew with beautiful photos and thought "Wow I want that!". That lead to her first photoshoot. She loved the results and quickly lead to more photoshoots, then paid work, then publications. She was in grad school at the time and thought what a fun, exciting way to make money between studying!! Now she is a full time model and does not regret that decision at all!! Biggest accomplishments include multiple well known glamour/swimwear magazines as calendar features, featured model, and cover model. She has traveled as far as Vegas, Florida, Costa Rica, Jamaica, and Hawaii for photoshoots. She has also done product advertisements for well known swimwear and lingerie companies. She has been featured on Maxim online and have worked both Maxim and FHM events. However, she is most known for her tv performances. She started off as lead extra on well known shows including Spike TV Inkmaster Season 2, NBC Do no Harm, and Style Network Jerseylicious to name a few. She is well known for her "ground breaking scene stealing, and controversial " performance as cast member on Season 1 VH1 Dating Naked. She was also a celebrity guest on NBC Universal show Crazy Talk interviewed by NY Live Host Ben Aaron. She strives to stay active in the model world with more publications and exposure and trying to get as big as she can!! Unfortunately she had to turn down the role on this years Season 3 Dating Naked due to being in a serious relationship. However, this isn't the last you have seen or heard from her!! Hopefully not!!

I began modeling in Tallahassee, FL when I was real young with the Barbizon Modeling and Acting Company. They taught everything I could ever want to know. They sent me to California for IMTA. Which is basically a giant competition for agencies and schools to notice you from all across the world. It's really cool. Once I got into high school I took a break from all of it. I had my daughter young and after having her something clicked. I wanted to be that mom that she would look at one day and brag. What better way then to get back into this game! I began very slowly. It's not easy getting into this world as an adult. But I kept going and eventually found the brand IBMS. The have helped me so much and helping me take giant steps instead of baby steps. I'm excited to see my future and thankful for the people who have gotten me here.

Modeling for some is a career, for others a passion. For me it has always been about the passionate love affair with the camera. My name is Raven Fox and I believe in taking each shoot to a new level. I have been in front of the camera since I was born , at first it was a love - hate relationship, but now its a great way for me to be myself. When off camera I love teaching dance , riding my motorcycle, or just enjoying the company of those I love. My favorite place to be is the beach, and if you haven't been to one recently you are missing out! Raven Fox, over and out!
